

ALICE AMATI

Plaster Magazine

The Frieze London guide nobody asked for

By Plaster Staff

07/10/2024

PLASTER

New season, new unsolicited art week guide. Here's what to see and where to eat, drink, shop and stay during Frieze Week 2024, according to Plaster

Feng Shang Princess in Regent's Canal, where we held the Plaster launch party last year

It's that time of year again – Frieze Week – when the city gives over to the business fair and menty-b factory dressed up as a series of entertaining exhibitions and louche parties. (Pills? No, that's my Priadel!) Word on the street says that the big collectors and savvy galleries are holding out for Art Basel Paris – let's face it, the food, drinks and hotels really are better à Paris. But we're invested in London, so we're going through the motions. Seriously, there are some great things happening this week. So once again, not that you asked for it, the Plaster staff put their heads together to create an alternative guide on what to see and where to eat, drink, shop and stay in London during Frieze Week 2024.

Miko Veldkamp, 'Buketan', Alice Amati

This is Veldkamp's first solo show in central London. Originally from Suriname, raised in the Netherlands, and now based in New York, Veldkamp blends the influences of all three places in his work, to create work which feels like stepping into a dream, both familiar and otherworldly. The exhibition touches on big themes – history, identity, colonialism and city life – but in a way that feels personal and thoughtful, as if he's inviting us into his world to reflect on these ideas together. – Milo Astaire

8th October – 9th November at 27 Warren St, London W1T 5NB